Overview

The 35th International Conference on Information Systems Development (ISD 2027) invites researchers, practitioners and educators to share research and experiences on the development, use and management of information systems.

Returning to Karlstad 22 years after ISD 2005 (with the theme "Bridging the Gap between Academia and Industry"), we ask how that relationship must be rethought in the AI era.

The rapid advancement of all forms of artificial intelligence is transforming how information systems are designed, developed, and used. These developments raise fundamental questions about the relationship between academic research and industrial practice. As technological innovation accelerates, how can researchers and practitioners learn from each other, exchange knowledge, and collaboratively shape the future of information systems development?

Important: ISD invites original papers. All the submissions will be checked on plagiarism and AI writing.
